The Water Urn a natural farewell

Losing someone you love is one of the most difficult things in life. Grieving such a loss can take years and the person will never leave your thoughts entirely. As cremation continues to grow in popularity, so does the difficulty in deciding where to place the ashes and very importantly, to find a manner for families to remember their loved one. Compared to the suddenness of scattering the ashes and the inevitable regret of not having a place for future generations to visit, the Water Urn offers a slower process of saying goodbye.

The Water Urn is eco-friendly in that using nature's elements, it gradually commits the ashes to the ground but in the beautiful surrounds of a garden and in a manner that gives the loss of a loved one a physical place in a family's life.

Irish Green

Forest

The Water Urn is made of bronze and will last a lifetime. Just like a family plot, the Water Urn offers space initially for two persons but can be used again for other family members. For co-mingling, the process can be delayed until a second interment takes place. Other families can use the Water Urn after tenure, if applicable, expires.

The Water Urn a natural farewell

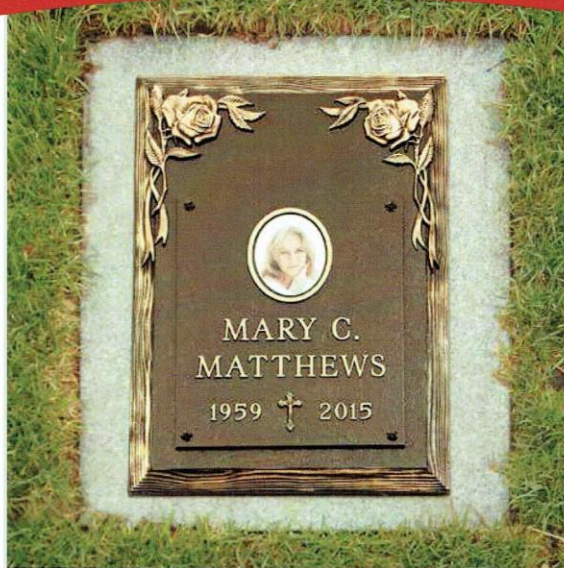

The Water Urn is a hollow bronze ball with space for the ash of two people and openings that allow rainwater to enter. The Urn catches the rainwater, which then comes into contact with the ash. With the help of a patented system, the ash is gradually released with the water and absorbed by the earth. It takes an average of ten years until the ashes of a single person is completely absorbed by the ground. The speed with which the ash is absorbed by the earth depends upon the amount of rainfall in a year. As the release of the ash is dependent on natural rainfall, the whole process of entrusting a loved one to the earth thus becomes beautifully natural.

The Water Urn is not just an urn; it is an eco-friendly
Memorial Site in beautiful surrounds.
